C.C.C. Fire Hose Co.,
Canton, Mass.

Gentlemen:

We have had two fires this week;
one a factory, loss $22,000.00, at which we used 1500 feet of hose,
most of it C.C.C., over eight years old,
without a burst or leak. "Some Hose."

Yours very truly,
J. E. MARSHALL,
Chief Engineer.

Mr. Chief:

Why not buy "C.C.C." Hose this time and forget hose troubles for the next eight years or more?

In August, 1897, the shirt factory, owned by Edwin Boeshore, located where the present fire house stands, was totally destroyed by fire during the night, and damaged the north side of the house of Isaac Ebling, which stands across the alley.

On Feb. 17th, 1909, the shed at the Fredericksburg House, owned by Wm. M. Glick, was totally destroyed; a bucket brigade composed of about fifty people saved the adjoining stables. This fire started about 6 P. M.

On June 7th, 1914, Fisher's butcher house, formerly a creamery, was totally destroyed.

In the fall of 1915 a fire broke out in the tinsmith shop of Geo. W. Kirst and Son. The blaze was extinguished by a chemical fire engine in charge of the employees of M. C. Bressler's cigar factory. Thus what might have been a disastrous fire was averted. Immediately after this fire the citizens of Fredericks-

Snavelly also sold town lots; but to Stump belongs the honor of founding the town. The place received the name of Fredericksburg, but was often called "Newtown," oftner "Stumpstown" and at times "Nassau." All of these names were used in old deeds of the sixties and later. Fredericksburg was sometimes spoken of as the "Navy Yard" probably from the fact that here, in

The vessel was constructed on a vacant portion of St. John's grave yard, whence it was carried on strong wagons drawn by horses to Jonestown, and there launched on the waters of the Union Canal. It was called "Columbus" and it is said to have carried freight for many years between Philadelphia and points west.

In the year 1827 occurred the great fire which destroyed nearly one-fourth of the village. It seemed that the sporting blood of America was already in evidence in those early days, and a certain clerk in a store on the northwest corner of the square saw a crow or blackbird sitting on the thatched roof of a stable. He straightway conceived the idea of killing the bird by shooting it. With an old flint lock, loaded with powder, shot and a wad of tow, he fired. Tradition fails to state whether the bird was killed or not, but it is quite certain that the wad of tow set fire to the straw thatched roof, and soon the stable was in a blaze. Fanned by a northwest wind, the flames swept over the village to its eastern borders, and many houses and a greater number of stables were destroyed. Owing to the scarcity of water and the complete lack of fire fighting apparatus, it was impossible to check the onward march of the flames. It was estimated at the time that property to the value of $7,000 was destroyed.

There was no insurance, and it is to the credit of the benevolent spirit of the time to say that two days after the fire a meeting was held at Lebanon, whose object was to give relief to the sufferers. Two committeemen in every township in the county were ap-

Prior to this calamity the villagers depended largely for their water supply on natural springs and on the two brooks on the east and west, but now a spirit of progress awakened and a well was excavated in the center of Market Square in which was placed a wooden pump known as the town pump. Soon after the fearful conflagration of 1827, a project was set on foot to obtain the means of protection against such a calamity. In 1830 a small plot of ground was leased from Peter Groff (the spot is now covered by the residence of Mr. C. G. Beaver) on which a small house was erected in which to keep a fire engine. This structure was built with contributions of money and labor by the people. It was not fully paid until 1838. In the meantime a fire engine was purchased with money contributed by the property owners. This machine did service for thirty years at the head of holiday parades and sprinkling demonstrations in the middle of Market Square, where water was obtained at the town pump. It did service also at a fire which consumed Rev. John Gring's barn on Center Street. The barn was ignited by lightning and entirely destroyed, during a violent thunder storm of 1856. No other property was destroyed.

Towards the seventies the old engine house suffered greatly not only from ravages of time and decay, but also from the native vandalism of the village boys, who forced off doors and siding to get at the old engine, which was always an object of wonder and curiosity. It was at length entirely removed and the old fire engine became the plaything of the boys, who finally pushed it into a clay pit on North Pinegrove Street. There it was covered out of sight when the pit was filled in to convert it into building lots.

In 1868 another hand engine was bought from the "Union Fire Company" of Lebanon. Fortunately no occasion occurred to test the efficiency of this machine at Fredericksburg. It was housed in a stable on the exact spot where the present engine house now stands,

WE SELL LUMBER TO BUILD HOUSES AND THE COAL TO HEAT THEM

And if your house is rightly built with our kind of lumber you won't need much coal to heat it. A house warmly built with good material (such as we handle) is a dividend paying investment. The saving of coal soon offsets the difference in first cost between building a house warm and building it the ordinary way. No matter what you want in building material, we have it—the quality is always there—and as to our prices, well, you know, we are always right on that score.

Our coal includes the very best grades only, both hard and soft. No room here for anything else.

GRANT MOTOR CAR CORPORATION

Many choose the Grant because of its flexibility, ease of handling and ease of riding.

Some choose the Grant because of its beautiful roomy body.

Others say the Grant Six has so much "pep," "ginger and "go" in it that it's an inspiration to drive it.

To all Grant owners the big fuel and oil mileage make a strong appeal.

Why pay more for any six?

The Grant Six gives you more value than any other six.

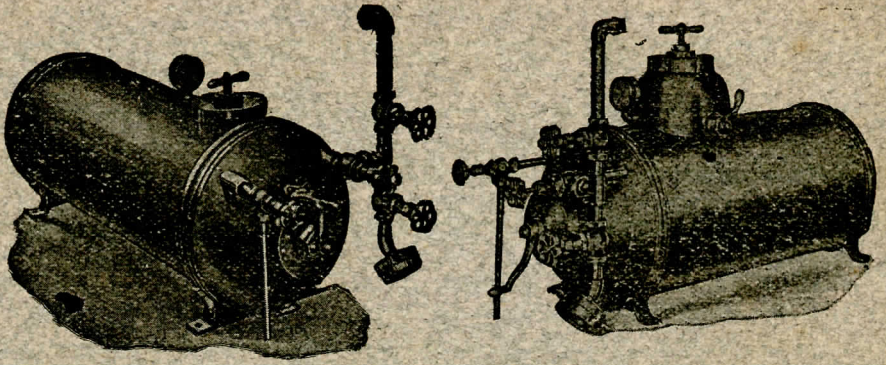

Come, prove it for yourself.
